Excerpt from The Epidemic of the Nineteenth Century Legislated forty years beforehand, for the more abundant supply of His people with slaves, when they would need laborers in cultivating the promised land. The abolitionist is bound, undoubtedly, to shew how it could have happened, under his view of slavery, that this sin, this abomination of all abominations, if not legislated into existence, was legislated into enlargement and perpetuity by God himself, who, in the four hundred years of His civil administration.
